

Hello fellow scribe,

As promised, here are two free tools to help you write your best book yet!

I recommend reading The 10-Minute Crash Course in Story Structure first. It will teach you the key elements that keep readers turning the page -- and because it's to the point, it won't overwhelm you with info.

Once you know the basics of story structure, the Book Compass tracker will make a lot more sense.

Now that you have a handle on story structure, grab the novel tracker and start planning your book -- or editing your current one.

Make sure to take a look at the instructions tab for a short how-to. It'll take you less than five minutes to get the hang of this system.

We're all about getting you writing better sooner without the overwhelm.

ACT 2
handle their new situation and starting to move towards learning a crucial thing about the world or themselves.
Chapter/Event: What is your character's goal and what is standing in their way?
Turning point: Something changes. Either your character achieves their goal or fails and decides on a new one.
External conflict change: Does the external conflict end better or worse than at the beginning of the chapter?
Internal conflict change: How does each main character's internal world change as a result of the events of this chapter?
